

London's Quintessentially Estates is expanding to the Big Apple

CITYA.M.

Monday, 13 March 2017

London-based global property group Quintessentially Estates is expanding its international referral network to New York City in a collaboration with an estate brokerage in the Big Apple.

The firm, which specialises in sales and acquisitions of prime residential properties in London, Hong Kong, Los Angeles and elsewhere, is working to increase its international presence.

Penny Mosgrove, chief executive of Quintessentially Estates, said the firm is taking into account both the local market potential as well as the wider investor market.

Read more: London looks to New York for its property ideas

"The expansion is a result of an uplift in the needs of our clients and members for both primary homes as well as investments in the US marketplace and our resulting desire to service their every property need," Mosgrove said.

She added the move, which collaborates with the New York-based Corcoran Group demonstrates the firm's commitment to the US market following a period of relative uncertainty in buyer and vendor sentiment.

"We are highly optimistic about the potential for success in this market."

Mosgrove manages a referral network of over 60 Quintessentially Group offices across all continents.

Read more: Ikea sale: Property fund buys 25 retail parks across Europe in €900m deal

Tara King-Brown and Amy Williamson, licensed associate real estate brokers with Corcoran, have acted as trusted advisors to international buyers and sellers in the New York luxury property market for over a decade.

"Our new relationship with Quintessentially Estates will allow us to connect its valued members to prime opportunities for investment and enjoyment in this powerhouse city," they said.

To read more, please visit: <https://www.newsr.in/n/business/75e5djfp6/london-039-quintessentially-estates-is-expanding-to.htm>