

Quintessentially Estates moves into NYC with Corcoran tie-up

State-side expansion for real estate arm of luxury concierge firm

High-end property advisory Quintessentially Estates has boosted its international reach with a new tie-up in the States.

The firm is now collaborating with Tara King-Brown and Amy Williamson of The Corcoran Group in New York, two of the famous real estate firm's top-performing agents.

Headed up by Penny Mosgrove, the real estate arm of concierge pioneer Quintessentially has been offering sale and acquisition services to HNW clients across London, Hong Kong, LA, Monaco, Portugal and Switzerland since 2000, and now has a 60-strong global referral network with offices on all continents.

Penny Mosgrove, CEO: "Identifying and increasing the Quintessentially Estates international presence is a real focus for us, taking into account both the local market potential as well as the wider investor market. The expansion is a result of an uplift in the needs of our clients and members for both primary homes as well as investments in the US marketplace and our resulting desire to service their every property need. This dedicated new offering in New York demonstrates our commitment to the US market following a period of relative uncertainty in buyer and vendor sentiment and we are highly optimistic about the potential for success in this market."

Tara King-Brown and Amy Williamson, Licensed Associate Real Estate Brokers with The Corcoran Group: "We have acted as trusted advisors to international buyers and sellers in the New York luxury property market for over a decade, enabling our global clientele to navigate the market with ease. Our new relationship with Quintessentially Estates will allow us to connect its valued members to prime opportunities for investment and enjoyment in this powerhouse city."
