

The Telegraph

Inside the £56m holiday home for the super-rich - with panic buttons and a T-Rex Head

I recently had a European buyer with €180 million to spend on the Cote d'Azur but I couldn't find the right property Penny Mosgrove of luxury agent Quintessentially Estates

"I recently had a European buyer with €180 million to spend on the Cote d'Azur but I couldn't find the right property," says Penny Mosgrove of luxury agent Quintessentially Estates. Security is the priority for such buyers, as well as privacy.

Château Soligny in the sought-after La Californie area, at €55 million for sale through Knight Frank Mosgrove's clients are mostly Swiss, Scandinavian or British, although the seriously big buyers are from the US tech industry, she says.

"They want the South of France, but are also looking at Majorca and Ibiza," she adds. "The Cote d'Azur still has more to suit the people with really big budgets." They might do well to check out Alang Alang before its owner changes his mind and decides he's not ready to sell.

To read more, please visit: <http://nam-auth-dev-cdn.awspreprod.telegraph.co.uk/property/abroad/gurkha-guards-panic-buttons-t-rex-head-inside-64-million-holiday/>